Supporting European doctors in their transition to UK practice

7–8 April 2016

Royal College of Physicians, London

The transition to working in the NHS can be challenging for doctors: they must adjust to an unfamiliar training pathway and management structure, in addition to the demands of clinical practice in a new working environment.

The Royal College of Physicians (RCP) has developed the PROMISE programme to support European doctors who have recently started working in the UK or who plan to apply for an NHS post in the near future.

The inaugural course takes place in London on 7–8 April 2016 and will bring doctors from across Europe together with facilitators from the RCP, the General Medical Council and several NHS trusts. The varied programme is designed to develop doctors' understanding of NHS systems and ultimately to improve the standard of care that patients receive.

Sessions will include:

- > the structure of the NHS
- > welcome to UK practice: ethical scenarios
- > common acute medical problems in the UK
- > sharing care with the community
- > developing a career in medicine.
